The Secretive Company That Might End Privacy as We Know It

A little-known start-up helps law enforcement match photos of unknown people to their online images — and "might lead to a dystopian future or something," a backer says.

responded that he couldn't be sure how the new tool would be used. "I'm just an engineer," he said. Lemoine quoted a lyric from a song about the wartime rocket scientist Wernher von Braun, in a heavy German accent: "Once the rockets are up, who cares where they come down?" Then he angrily walked out.

As a company, Microsoft has brought four lawsuits against the U.S. government since 2013 to protect people's privacy rights in an era when new technology can enable mass surveillance. We repeatedly have sought to preserve longstanding protections – and in our view timeless values – that are embodied in the First and Fourth Amendments to the Constitution. From our vantage point, it's important to act before an excessive use of “How do you sustain a business model in which users don’t pay for your service?” Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-UT) asked Zuckerberg early on in the hearing.

“Senator, we run ads,” Zuckerberg replied.

Black people in California are stopped far more often by police, major study proves “People usually use data against us,” he added. “Now is the time to use it in the people’s interests.”

...underscores how it is people who end up affected by the choices we make in our practices of data collection, analysis, and communication. More than that, it's almost always the bodies of those who have been disempowered by forces they cannot control, such as sexism, racism, or classism—or, more likely, the intersection of all three—who experience the most severe consequences of these choices.
